Suffragettes continue to cause chaos

The Capital was rocked by further protests from fanatical suffragettes again this Friday sending waves of anger through both the city and Parliament.

Women continue to protest in the streets pushing the extreme agenda of demanding the right to vote in our parliamentary decisions. Many people expressed to us their displeasure at these protests. A concerned citizen who wished to remain anonymous stated, "women want completely different things to men – them voting will ruin the whole system".

Mrs Wilbur Jones was equally dismayed by the erratic behaviour, "We are already equal. I do not want or need to be able to vote to prove this."

These protesters are failing to see that their behaviour is damaging our way of life as they continue this war on democracy. One thing that is for certain, this argument is not going to go away any time soon.

On the roads this morning your regular commute to work was undoubtedly disrupted by the many protests taking place throughout the capital. Unless someone steps in to halt the suffragette protests, then this situation is likely to continue. Bosses across our nation are having their patience tested by these women, with entire workforces being tardy and businesses bottom-lines being attacked.
